1 Japanese Similarity Analysis of Anime Genres

1.1 Introduction

Immersion learning is a method of foreign language learning (also called acquisition) which emphasizes the learning of a foreign language using native content in the language as the primary study material. For Japanese, one source of content for use in immersion learning is anime. Anime is attractive content because of the large volume and diversity of media available as well as the presence of subtitles which act as transcripts for the spoken dialogue of an episode. Different methods and approaches for using anime to learn the Japanese language have been presented on different internet sites and platforms, one example being AJATT (All Japanese All The Time) [1] and its various adaptations and modifications.

One source of information relating to tips, strategies, and tools for applying an AJATT style approach to Japanese learning using Anime is a YouTube channel called Matt vs Japan [2]. One idea that has been presented by MattvsJapan, as well as on the Refold language learning guide is the idea of language "domains", or genres of content which have a specific subset of language that is commonly used (e.g. fantasy vs. crime drama vs. slice-of-life) [3]. By focusing on a single domain, words unique to a domain can be encountered more frequency, thus increasing the chance of acquiring them for long term retention. The aquisition of words has been deemed as highly important for learning a language, such as by Steve Kaufmann (one of the founders of LingQ) [4] [5]. Repeated exposure to the same vocabularly can also enhance the subconscious comprehension of those words which is also a good place to start when wanting to begin speaking (or outputting) in a language [6]. Therefore, focusing on a single domain when immersing is an attractive strategy for quickly aquiring foreign language vocabulary.

One idea to determine the domain of a show/piece of content is by the genre of the media (e.g. slice-of-life). While this seems to be a sensible categorization of media into language domains, the question remains (at least to me) whether shows within a single genre quantitatively have a higher language similarity than shows across different tagged genres.

The aim of this repo is to provide an analysis of the language content from different anime shows to quantify the degree of similarity in the language used, as well as to provide tools for identifying vocab-similar and vocab dis-similar shows. The objectives are as follows: - Develope criteria for comparing the similarity of the language present between any two shows. - Identify and differentiate between "core language" and "domain language". - Compare the degree of similarity of the language of shows in a single genre compared to shows across genres.

1.2 Dataset and Analysis Methods

1.2.1 Description of Dataset

Subtitle files for analyzing were acquired by downloading from Kitsunekko.net under the Japanese subtitles page (https://kitsunekko.net/). (As of 2026-04-09 the actual site seems to be down, so some subtitles alternatively were obtained by cloning https://github.com/Ajatt-Tools/kitsunekko-mirror/tree/main) For analysis, SRT subtitle files were solely used because of their simple text formatting compared to ASS files. For some shows with subtitles only available in the ASS format, conversion of these files to SRT was done using the subtitle tool Aegisub (https://aegisub.org/) by exporting as SRT files after choosing the "clean tags" option in the export window.

The subtitles for 100 shows were obtained as the dataset for analysis (stored in the Data folder), with the genres for the chosen shows taken from the information present in their respective listings on MyAnimeList (https://myanimelist.net). A complete list of all the shows used with their genres (as well as additional information) is included in the "Supporting Info/show_genres.xlsx" spreadsheet.

The distribution of genres for the shows is as follow:

- Action: 33
- Drama: 28
- Fantasy: 22
- Sci-Fi: 19
- Mystery: 19
- Romance: 18
- Adventure: 13
- Comedy: 14
- Sports: 13
- Supernatural: 12
- Slice of Life: 12
- Suspense: 11
- Ecchi: 2
- Avant Garde: 1

Given that the Ecchi and Avant Garde genre only show up a small number of times, these two categories are excluded from the analysis.

1.2.2 Analysis Methods

Lemma Extraction For quantifying the similarity between two (or more) selections of japanese text, a lemmas-based comparison approach was chosen, with the first step being to break the entire text into its component lemmas. In linguistics, lemmas are the "dictionary form" of a word, and can be thought of as the 'base' form. For example, in English the words break, broke, broken, and breaking all share the same lemma: break (See Wiki).

For a similarity analysis between two bodies of Japanese text, I am interested in what unique words are present in a show or shared between shows, not whether the same forms of a word are shared. In other words, whether the base word 'to go' ( ) is shared, and not whether specific conjugations (such as ,) are shared. Therefore, the lemmas present in a block of Japanese text are chosen as the components for further comparison.

To give an example, consider the following 4 sentences, each with one additional change to the words used compared to the original, first sentence: - (0) original: " " - (1) one change: " " - (2) two changes: " " - (3) three changes: " "

With each sentence, the content becomes more distinct/unique from the original sentence.

Using the fugashi package with the Tagger class, we can extract the lemmas present in each of the above sentences.

[8]:
```
"""
Example for Lemma extraction from text using fugashi
"""
from fugashi import Tagger def lemma_extract(text):

    """
    Short function for returning a list of words and a list of the lemmas
    """
    words = tagger(text)

    lemma_list = []
    for word in words:
        lemma_list.append(word.feature.lemma)

    return words, lemma_list

tagger = Tagger('-Owakati')

orig_sent = "      "  # base sentence for comparison sent_1diff = "      "  # one word difference sent_2diff = "      "  # two words different sent_3diff = "      "  # three words different text = [orig_sent, sent_1diff, sent_2diff, sent_3diff]

word_list = []
lemma_list = []
for sentence in text:
    words, lemmas = lemma_extract(sentence)

    word_list.append(words)
    lemma_list.append(lemmas)

print(f"Original Sentence: {text[0]}") print(f"Original lemmas: {lemma_list[0]}\n")
print(f"1 diff Sentence: {text[1]}")
print(f"1 diff lemmas: {lemma_list[1]}\n")
print(f"2 diff Sentence: {text[2]}")
print(f"2 diff lemmas: {lemma_list[2]}\n")
print(f"3 diff Sentence: {text[3]}")
print(f"3 diff lemmas: {lemma_list[3]}\n")
```

```
Original Sentence:
Original lemmas: ['-  ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ']

1 diff Sentence:
1 diff lemmas: [' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ']

2 diff Sentence:
2 diff lemmas: [' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ']

3 diff Sentence:
3 diff lemmas: [' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ', ' ']

Calculating the Similarity of Lemma sets For English text, similarity scores between sets of documents or text can be done fairly easily using criteria such as the Term Frequency-Inverse Document Frequency (IF-IDF) and libraries such as scikit with sklearn. One challenge I faced while trying to set these tools up however was in modifying the workflow from English to Japanese. While there are a few sites which describe adapting sklearn to Asian languages, specifically using the TfidfVectorizer class with a custom tokenizer (such as here) (which is what I originally wanted to do), I wasn't quite able to figure out how to apply this using the fugashi package which I was more comfortable with using, and so I decided to try a different approach.

In the previous code block, lists of the lemmas present in each of the example sentences were generated. If the frequency of occurence of each lemma in the sentence is ignored, then each list can be converted into a set, resulting in a collection listing the unique lemmas present in a given text. From here, methods which quantify the similarity between two sets can be applied to quantify how similar the lemma collection between the sentences are.

The value I am using to evaluate the similarity of sets is the Jaccard Similarity Coefficient, and is defined as the size of the intersection between two sets divided by the size of the union of the sets.

$$J(A, B) = \frac{|A \cap B|}{|A \cup B|}$$

where A and B are two sets for comparison. The calculation is commutative, so order of the sets does not matter.

Setting up calculating the Jaccard Similarity can easily be done in python, as shown here (or here) and demonstrated below.

[9]:
```
"""
Quantifying the similarity of sentences using Jaccard Similarity on sets of the␣ ↪lemmas present
"""
set1 = set(lemma_list[0])
set2 = set(lemma_list[1])
set3 = set(lemma_list[2])
set4 = set(lemma_list[3])

def jaccard_similar(set1, set2):
    return len(set1.intersection(set2)) / len(set1.union(set2))

print(f"1 against 1: {jaccard_similar(set1, set1)}")
print(f"1 against 2: {jaccard_similar(set1, set2)}")
print(f"1 against 3: {jaccard_similar(set1, set3)}")
print(f"1 against 4: {jaccard_similar(set1, set4)}")
```

```
1 against 1: 1.0
1 against 2: 0.7777777777777778
1 against 3: 0.6
1 against 4: 0.45454545454545453

As expected, the similarity value for a lemma set compared against itself is 1, meaning the sets are identical. As each sentence becomes more and more different than the original, the Jaccard coefficient decreases, with a value of ~0.45 for a sentence with 4 changed words from the original.

To recap, in order to compare the similarity of the language used in between two anime shows, the following steps will be done: - extract a set of the lemmas present within the subtitle files of each show - calculate the Jaccard Similarity Coefficient between the shows.

1.3 Results

In this section, subtitle files for each show in the 'Data' folder is parsed to create sets of the unique lemmas present in each show. This lemma set for each show will serve as the base data for analysis.

1.3.1 Creating database of lemmas from shows

Lemma database from Data subtitles generated

1.3.2 Exploring the generated dataset

The generated data set (lemma_database) is set up as a dictionary with the show names as keys and their associated value a list of the lemmas present. This list contains the unique lemmas present in all the subtitles for a given show (duplicates removed by converting the list of lemmas present into a set).

An example of requesting a lemma set for a given show as well as confirming its data type is shown below.

```python
Example of the contents of the lemma_database dictionary
print(lemma_database['charlotte']) print(f"The type of show lemma list is {type(lemma_database['charlotte'])}")

The range of unique lemmas in the shows is actually somewhat large, the smallest being 896 for "cidar no you ni", suggesting the lowest diversity of words used in this media, and the largest being "Shirobako" at around 5255, suggesting a large diverstiy of words. To note, these numbers aren't scaled by the number of episodes considered for each show (more episodes in a show can introduce more lemmas than less shows). For each, approximately 12 episodes for each show were used although this number was not strictly fixed, and also doesn't apply to "cidar no you ni" because it's a movie.

1.3.3 Core-language vs. Domain-language

Now that the lemma database has been generated, the first question to ask is how do we define "Core-language" vs. "Domain-language"? If we take the idea of "Domain-language", or a subset of vocabulary unique to a particularly "domain", as true, then we can generally define "Core-language" as language that is present in everything, while "Domain-language" is only present in a subset of everything. This can be visualized in the image below: Core language forms the base of all the media, with the domain language for each media in addition to the core-language but separate from each media.

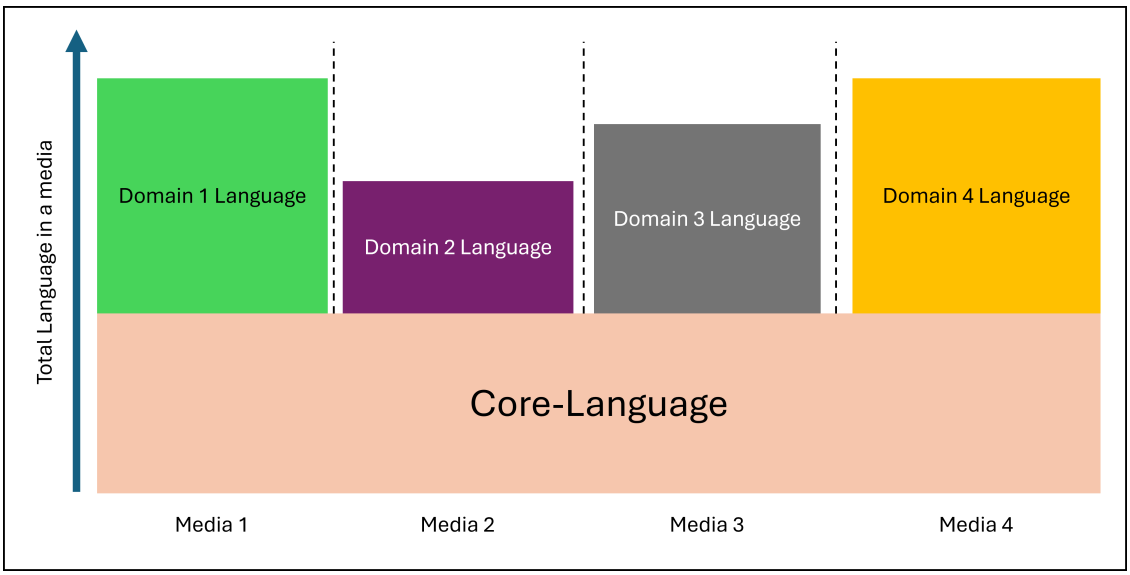

Figure 1: Diagram illustration of core-vocabularly vs domain-vocabular. Core vocab forms a foundations for all of media in a given set, while the domain language fills out the remaining vocab and is potentially shared with other media, but not across all media.

To start, let's define "Core Vocabulary" as the set of lemmas which occur in 100% of the shows in the dataset.

```
from lemma_database_analysis import percentage_vocab_list lemmas_all_shows = percentage_vocab_list(lemma_database, 100) print(f"Number of lemmas present in all shows: {len(lemmas_all_shows)},␣ ↪{(len(lemmas_all_shows) / len(unique_lemmas))*100: .3f} % of the total␣ ↪lemmas in the dataset")

```

```
Number of lemmas present in all shows: 156,  0.470 % of the total lemmas in the dataset

So from the above calculation, for the dataset of subtitles analyzed there are only 156 lemmas that are present in every show, about 0.47% of all lemmas present. We can see how much this number depends on the threshold percentage.

[15]:
```
import matplotlib.pyplot as plt
import numpy as np

num_of_lemmas = []
for i in range(101):
    num_of_lemmas.append(len(percentage_vocab_list(lemma_database, i))) plt.plot(range(101), num_of_lemmas)

plt.hlines(max(num_of_lemmas)/(np.e2), 0, 100, linestyles='--')
plt.xlabel("Percentage of shows (%)")
plt.ylabel("Num of Lemmas that occur in Per of shows and above") plt.ylim(0, None)
plt.xlim(0, 100)

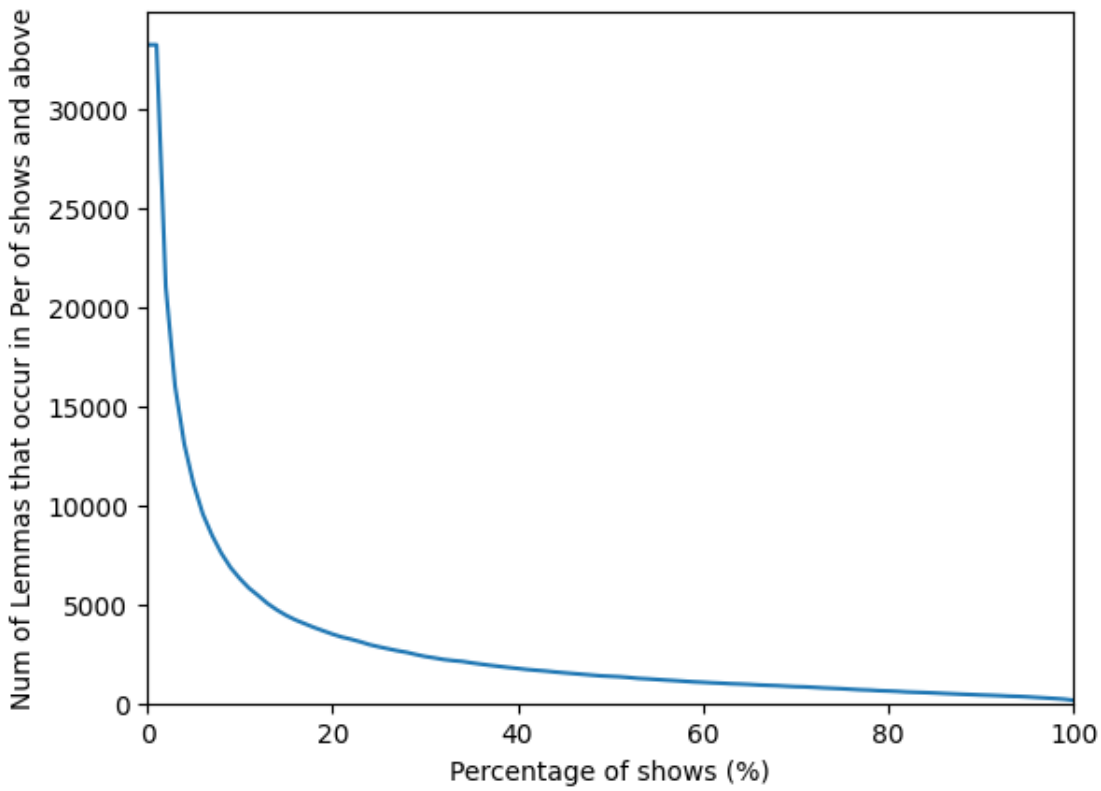

Figure 2: Dependence of the number of lemmas which occurs in a percentage of the shows as a function of threshold percentage. The smallest number of lemmas occur at 100% (representing the lemmas which are in 100% of the shows) and increase as the threshold percentage is decreased. At 0% the number of lemmas equals the total number of unique lemmas in the dataset.

From the above graph, as the threshold for show occurence decreases, the number of lemmas which satisfy the criteria of occuring in at least that % of shows increases. As the percentage threshold decreases, the number of lemmas begins to quick increase in a reciprocal fashion, beginning to increase rapidly below 10-15%. In other words, there are a lot of lemmas which only are found in $< 10\%$ of the shows.

Below is the gradient of the above plot, which also shows that the rate in which the lemmas increases spikes rapidly below 10%.

```
import matplotlib.pyplot as plt
import numpy as np

gradient = np.gradient(num_of_lemmas, 1)

plt.plot(-gradient)
plt.xlabel("Percentage of shows (%)")
plt.ylabel("-Slope (lemmas per per show threshold)")

[16]: Text(0, 0.5, '-Slope (lemmas per per show threshold)')

Overall, the number of lemmas which occur in 100% of the shows in the dataset is very small compared to the total lemma set (~0.47%). While this set does represent the Core-vocabulary as previously defined (from being in all media), separately considering core-vocab is not necessary for further analysis because (1) it is so small compared to the total lemmas and (2) this core-vocab set would just a similarity background to the score of all shows, therefore it would not impact the relative similarity difference between all shows (i.e. just shifts all the scores up and down if we include or ignore it).

1.3.4 Calculate a similarity matrix between each show

For calculating the Jaccard Similarity between the lemma sets of each show, the python calculations were performed the same as shown above using the singular sentence as the example.

Showing an example using the constructed lemma database, let's calculate the similarity between the shows "Hyouka" and "Charlotte".

```
set1 = lemma_database['charlotte'] set2 = lemma_database['hyouka']
```

```python
intersection_len = len(set1.intersection(set2)) union_len = len(set1.union(set2)) print(f"Lemmas shared between Charlotte and Hyouka: {set1.intersection(set2)}") print(f"Total unique lemmas in both shows combined: {set1.union(set2)}") print(f"Size of intersection set: {intersection_len}") print(f"Size of union set: {union_len}") print(f"Jaccard Similarity score: {intersection_len / union_len}")

```

The intersection shows all the lemmas which are shared between the two shows, while the union shows the total list of unique lemmas from both shows combined.

Calculating the Jaccard Similarity between all show combinations gives the following:

[18]:
```python
from itertools import product  # for helping iterate through the shows
import numpy as np

Get number of shows
num_shows = len(lemma_database) similarity_matrix = np.zeros((num_shows, num_shows))  # zero matrix for␣

The result is two matrices of dimensions (n x n) where n is the number of shows in the dataset. As expected, the matrix has a diagonal of 1's and is diagonally symmetric, since the diagonal represents the similarity of a show with itself, and since the Jaccard Similarity is commutative the similarity of Show 1 to Show 2 is the same as Show 2 to Show 1.

The next step is to compare the similarity scores within and across a genre. To start, we can assemble lists of each genre with each of the shows in it.

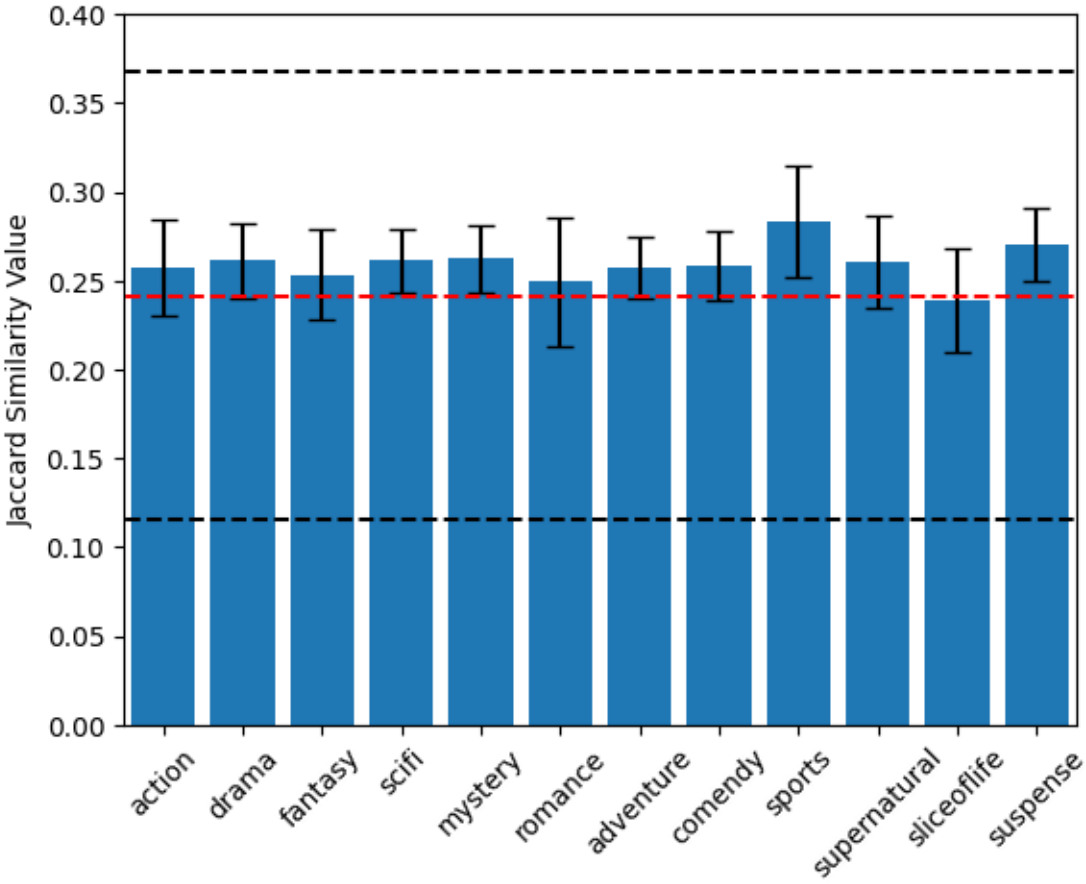

Figure 4: Jaccard similarity scores for all shows within a genre. Dashed lines are also plotted to show the max similarity in the similarity matrix between all shows, the minimum similarity, and the midway point between these two limits. Most genres had a similarity average greater than this midway point (apart from slice-of-life). The max similarity is found for the Sports genre.

Looking at the similarity matrix, the max Jaccard Similarity score amongst the show pairs calculated is 0.367, with the minimum score 0.115. The min similarity score of 0.115 is for the pair of "Banana Fish" and "Words bubble up like soda pop" (or Cidar no You ni Kotoba ga Wakiagaru). This is sensible for these two shows, as Banana Fish takes places in a gritty New York City dealing with gangs and drug conspiracies, while Cidar no You takes place in Japan, is of a much lighter atmosphere, and is a slice of life rom-com involving a young boy and girl who have different insecurities they are dealing with. Instead of just plotting the similarity score for the genres (as in Figure 4), we can also scale these similarity values by the number of shows in each genre list. The rationale for this would be that having a larger show list for a genre may introduce more unique vocabulary and decrease the overall similarity score. On the other hand, a genre list with a few number of shows can give a greater chance for more overlapping vocab, thus increasing the similarity.

By multiplying by the number of shows in a genre list, this can help to offset this trend.

Probably to be determined, but this scaling may give a more accurate representation of the similarity in a genre list of shows. The ways these values trend though goes with the size of the genre set, so starting with a more equal number of shows in each genre list is probably the way to go for future calculations. Action genre has the most number of shows in that list, so that may contribution to the higher similarity x length value.

Moving away from the genre analysis, we can look at see what the highest similarity match is for a given show in the dataset list. So doing more of an individual item-by-item evaluation.

```
from pathlib import Path

Getting the shows a pair show with the highest similarity score write_list = [] with open(Path("Supporting Info", "shows_with_their_highest_similar_match.
 ↪txt"), 'w') as f:
        for i in range(num_shows):
                series = list(lemma_database)[i]
```

                show_scores = similarity_matrix[i][:] show_scores[i] = None

                max_index = np.nanargmax(show_scores) write_list.append(f"'{series}' is most similar to␣ ↪'{list(lemma_database)[max_index]}' with a score of␣ ↪{show_scores[max_index]}\n")

        f.writelines(write_list)

For a number of these combinations, we can see that the closest matches share similar topics/content matter, particularly with sports related shows. For example, "Ahiru no Sora" is most similar to "Kuroko no Basket" which are both basketball shows, and "Blue Lock" is most similar to 'Giant Killing", which are both soccer shows. While this sport-specific similarity doesn't necessarily hold up for all sport shows (i.e. Haikyuu and Ahiru no Sora are highly similiar even though one is volleyball and the other is basketball), the sports association seems to be more common. This can make sense because shows revolving around athletics and specific sports may have a more unique vocabularly compared to two action/adventure shows, which can possess a wider diversity of content.

Funny enough, Suisei no Majo (Witch from Mercury) is most similar to Iron blooded orphans, which are both Gundam shows. In contrast, Iron Blooded Orphans is calculated as most similar to K: Return of Kings. So while the similarity values between two shows are commutative with respect to the calculations, they are not commutative when considering the maximum similarity between a set of shows, such as in the data set used.

I.e. When considering two shows A and B, if B is maximally similar to A, A is not necessarily maximally similar to B.

The above printed list was copied into excel and sorted based on the similarity score.

The resulting list is shown in the "Similarity scores for show pairs.xlsx" file.

To compare to the similarity values calculated for the genre groups, we can look at the average similarity score when comparing a random set of shows. For this, we will look at a random assemble of 10 shows, since that's the minimum number of shows in the genre groupings used.

[27]:
import random

Pull the similarity values between the shows within the given category
def ave_similarity_in_category(series_sample, show_list):
    scores = []
    for i,j in product(series_sample, series_sample):
        # Two shows I want to compare
        if i == j:  # skipping comparing the same show with itself continue

        # Get index value from show list using index()
        index1 = show_list.index(i) index2 = show_list.index(j) similarity_score = similarity_matrix[index1][index2] scores.append(similarity_score) ave_score = np.average(scores)

    std_score = np.std(scores)
```

```
    return ave_score, std_score ave = []

std = []
round_limit = 1000
for round in range(round_limit):
    series_sample = []
    # generate a random list of shows
    integers = random.sample(range(0, 100), 10)

    for i in integers:
        series_sample.append(list(lemma_database)[i]) ave_, std_ = ave_similarity_in_category(series_sample, show_list) ave.append(ave_)

    std.append(std_)

plt.scatter(range(round_limit), ave)
plt.errorbar(range(round_limit), ave, std, fmt='none', ecolor='black',␣

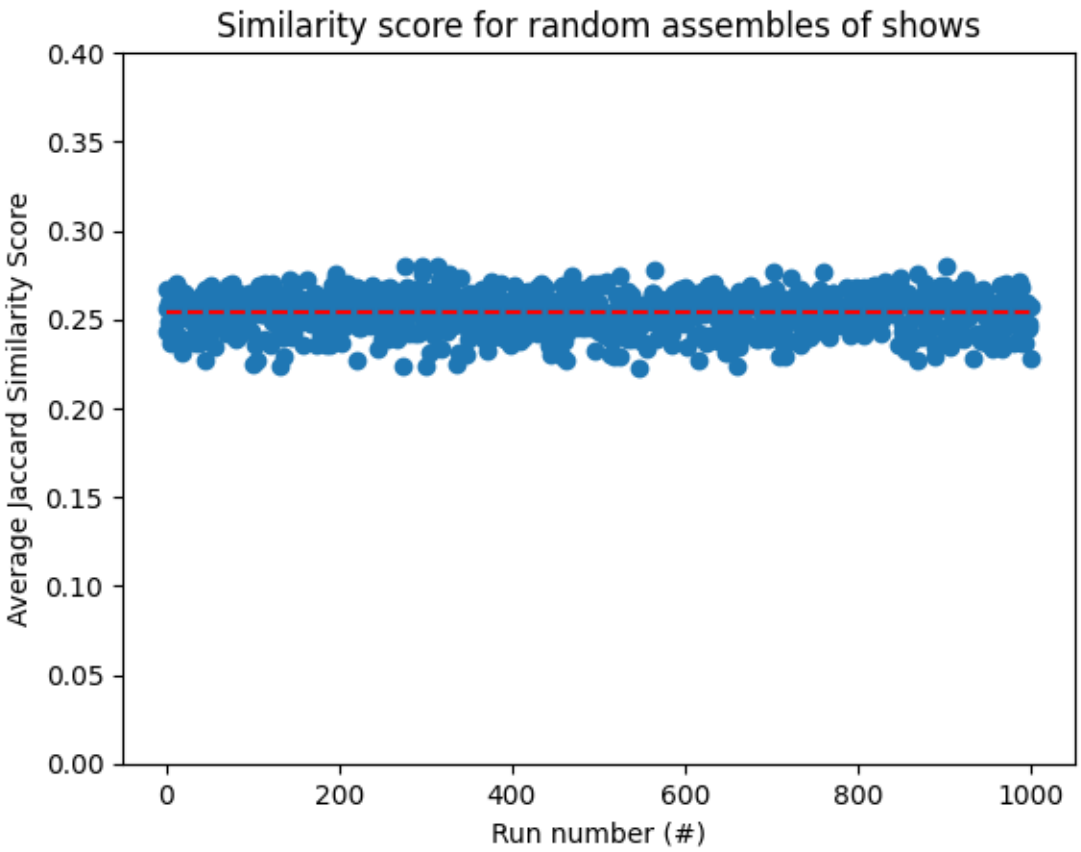

Figure 6: The average Jaccard Similarity Score calculated for a random ensemble of 10 shows and repeated for a number of times (shown by max of Run number). The average across all the runs is shown as the dotted red line. Even when repeating the block run multiple times, the average stays a little greater than 0.25. Comparing this value to the Jaccard Score calculated between the genre lists (Figure 4) shows that most of the genre groups average similarities close to this value, with expections being sports on the upper end and slice-of-life being on the lower end.

Comparing Figure 4 and Figure 6, we see that the average similarity value for the genre groups is comparable to the similarity value calculated for the random groups. Exceptions are the Sports Genre and Slice-of-life Genre, which may generally encompass topic/subject matters which are more unique or more shared compared to the other genre classifications. As the number of shows averaged increases, the average value appears to converge to around 0.253.

Therefore it can be concluded that apart from the Sports genre, any random assembly of shows have a good chance to result in the same similarity in language content as to sticking to a particularly Genre. The sports genre may be an exception because of the more specific and common language used in athletics and around specific sports (e.g. basketball vs. soccer vs. football). The reason for the seeming convergence of similarity values to around 0.253 is presently unknown, whether it's something inherent to the analysis approaches, or if this is suggesting that all shows in the database have at least 25% similarity to each other in the analyzed data.

1.4 Limitations to this Analysis

A limitation to this study is the size of the data set used. There are currently thousands of anime shows and while 100 were picked in order to try and get a representation for each of the genres used, more shows can always to added to the data set to see if it makes a difference. A related expansion could be to include more shows by programmatically parsing the entire Kitsunekko sub library, including .ass files by including their parsing tools.

The question potentially remains on the importance of similarity in media for language acquisition, and if lemmas are an appropriate parsing/categorization strategy to compare two shows.

Finally, the frequency of each lemma was not considered apart from how many shows it appeared in (i.e. how many total times a lemma appears in a show). An extension of the analysis is to generate a subset of lemmas from a show based on a frequency threshold, in other words compare two shows using lemmas which frequency occur in the subtitle text, instead of including lemmas which may only show up a handful of times.

1.5 Conclusion

The idea of using genres as a classification metric for anime shows to gather media with similarly used languages is an attractive strategy for immersion based language aquisition because of the increased repeated exposure to a limited subset of vocabulary, improving the chances of long-term acquisition of words. To quantify the similarity in anime shows with similar genre tags, the Japanese subtitles for 100 anime shows with a range of genre tags were analyzed using a Lemma based approach, with the similarity between shows quantified using Jaccard Similarity.

For the total database of subtitles analyzed, it was found that number of lemmas present in all shows in the database was small, (around 0.47%), indicating a very small set of "core-vocabularly", if core-vocabularly is taken as lemmas in all shows.

For the list of shows in each Genre, it was calculated that the similarity score for most genres was a little more than 0.25, with a higher exception being Sports, possibly due to the more uniques/shared language in athletics shows, particularly those focused around the same sport. When looking at the average similarity score of a random ensemble of shows, a score of 0.253 was found, comparable to the scores given to the genre separated lists. This therefore suggests that for any sized set of anime shows, a similar language similarity can be reached, regardless the genre.

When consider shows individually, there are some which possess higher similarity combinations than others, which for the data analyzed are saved in the "Similarity scores for show pairs.xlsx" file in Supporting Info.
